In Memoriam

CLARENCE MacKINNON

THE DALHOUSIE REVIEW records with profound sorrow the loss of an invaluable member of its Editorial Board. Dr. Clarence MacKinnon was one of the original group by whom, seventeen years ago, this enterprise in quarterly journalism was initiated. His colleagues on the Board know well, and those ever associated with him in any public effort can readily understand, how his enthusiasm for the magazine was a constant inspiration, how tireless was his energy in its interest, and how deep was his concern that it should serve the higher cultural values. Among the many causes which will be the poorer for lack of that eloquent voice and that convincing personality, the REVIEW now pays its tribute to one who served it well.
