

Antitheses &c.

We were now trading that illustrious our island which was once the territo-rary of the Caledonian empire & these savage shores and roving barbarians ~~now~~ derived the benefits of knowledge and the blessings of religion —
 To abstract the mind from all local emu-tion, would be impossible if it were increased and ^{enlarged} possible if it were possible;
 whatever withdraws us from the present of our times, whether makes the past the distant or the future predominant over the present advances us in the dignity of thinking beings. Far from my own from my spirit to such rigid Philosophy as may conduct us indifferent and unmoved over any ground which has been dignified ~~with~~ by wisdom, bravery or virtue That man is little to be envied whose patriotism ^{love} is not seen face upon the plain of Mars, the or whose purity would not considered among the causes of Peace —

Man bred in the universities of Scotland cannot be expected to be often decorated with the splendour of ornamental erudition, but they obtain a mediocrity of knowledge, between learning and ignorance, not inadequate to the purposes of common life which is I believe very widely diffused among them, and which is maintained in general by a national combination so inveterate that their spirits cannot depend it and actuate in particular by a spirit of enterprise so vigorous that their energies are constrained to prevail it, enables them to find in ^{to} make their way to employments, riches and distinctions — J. n.

The students for the most part go through boys, and depart before they are men; they carry with them little permanent knowledge, and therefore the superstructure cannot be lofty. The Grammar schools are not generally well supplied, for the character of a school master being there less benevolent than in England is seldom accepted by men who are capable to adorn it, and where the school has been deficient the College can effect little — J. n.

How would it surprise our enlightened Scotchman to hear a Company of Soldiers enquiring by what power the broad top of a stone, or why the stone when it is topped falls to the ground?

There is reason to believe that I do not remember any Naturalist to have remarked, that there was a time when the world was very thinly inhabited by beasts as well as by men, and that the woods had leisure to rise high before animals had long numbers sufficient to intercept them —

All travel has its advantages if the traveller visits better countries he may learn to improve his own, if fortune carries him to worse he may learn to enjoy it — J. n.

Accompanied the first day by another gentleman who could stay with us only long enough to show us how much we lost by our separation.

Irish Heath is nothing more than a rock covered with a thin layer of earth not a holly here of grass ~~is~~ and very futile of thistles. A small herd of cows grazes miserably upon it, in the summer. It seems never to have offered to man in heat a permanent habitation.

To travel commodiously without the interruption of toll-gates.

There is a man ^{to} aim to derive some degree of dignity and importance from the reputation of possessing a country seat.

At an hour some what late we come to St Andrews.

How very civilly quickly made us forget that we were strangers; and in the whole time of our stay we were gratified by every mode of kindness, and entertained with all the elegance of British hospitality.

An epidemical Lutheranism compounded of vulgar scrupulousness and worldly procity.

Dilence and solitude of inactive industry and gloomy depopulation. — where there is yet shame there may in time be virtue.

The Doctor who showed the library seemed to irritate in sublime English vanity by telling us that we had no such repository of books in England.

In one the desire of knowledge coolly gives way to the love of treasure; in the other is in danger of yielding to the love of money.

The Spaniel is shown has the compass of her cat and is troublesome to everybody.

The distance of a Cabanby from the present time seems to preclude the mind from contact or sympathy.
Events long past we barely know they are not considered —

— A tree might be a show in Scotland as a house at Venice —

— The Magnificence of his conversation easily drew us out of our way and the entertainment which we received would have been a sufficient recompense for a much greater deviation —

— Much is due to those who first take the way to knowledge and left only to their success the task of smoothing it
